It is clear that politicians in Washington are not going to end the war. The people themselves must take action to force them to bring the troops home now.

If we want to end the war, to have health care, education, and housing for all, to fight racism and police brutality, to defend the rights of women, immigrants, and the LGBT communities, then we have to build a mass movement in the streets, and we have to stay in the streets.

We must build a movement that will do what the war parties will never do --link the struggles of working people here with the struggles against war and occupation everywhere, including not only Iraq, but Palestine, Haiti, Afghanistan, Nepal, the Philippines, and everywhere people are struggling to for freedom and self-determination..

March 17, 2007 will mark the fourth anniversary of the invasion of Iraq. The Troops Out Now Coalition is working with the Answer Coalition and other national coalitions to organize a massive march on the Pentagon on the fourth anniversary of the illegal invasion of Iraq.

Together we must grasp the opportunity to help transform the turning tide against the war into a human tidal wave of antiwar resistance in the streets. Nothing should stand in the way of building a massive, united movement to converge on Washington and end the war. The crisis and opportunities ahead of us demand unity, and we will continue to do all we can to work for that unity.

Six hundred thousand Iraqis are dead. More than 3,000 U.S. soldiers are dead and tens of thousands have been wounded. This is not time to talk about timetables and "non-binding resolutions" or to get distracted by 2008 Presidential politics—it's time to take direct action to stop the war. We call on everyone to descend on Washington on March 27 to demand: Troops Out Now!
